

Notice is hereby given to the electors of the State of California that the following Bond Act will be submitted to the people of the State of California for their ratification at the next general election to be holden on the seventh day of November, A. D. 1922.

ANNUAL ROLL CALL

At the Service of All Mankind

An allegorical concept of the Red Cross as a peace-time ideal is employed by the American Red Cross in a new and striking poster for the annual Red Cross Roll Call. Spread out before the heroic size figure is the outline of the United States with a Red Cross superimposed upon it. Within its borders are sketched scenes depicting the chief activities of the Red Cross today—service to disabled veterans of the World War, disaster relief and promotion of the public health. The poster is the work of Lawrence Wiebur, a New York artist and will be displayed throughout the country during the enrollment of the Red Cross membership for 1923.

Permanently Removing Spots by the F. Thomas Process
If spots come back after your clothes have been to the cleaners, cleaned by the "F. Thomas Process."

The "F. Thomas Process" is a highly developed, scientific method of cleaning by which we obtain the perfect work for which this establishment is noted.

The cheap, "just as good" cleaner either washes your clothes in dirty gasoline, or soaks his gasoline with strong sulphuric acid. It is dangerous to have your clothes cleaned in "acid" gasoline. It is economy in the long run to have your clothes they have been thoroughly cleaned.

Every drop of cleaning fluid that we use is carefully re-distilled in our plant. Special equipment that we have installed to properly handle this work represents an investment of thousands of dollars.

Duck Hunting Reminiscences

By CLAUDE FOX

As I have heretofore stated the species of wild ducks most plentiful in the marshes in this vicinity were the widgeon, spoonbill and green-winged teal. The whistling baldpate, with its musical call had now practically deserted us, and the green fields of the peninsula, where grain had formerly grown, knew this species no more. Those large flocks containing countless thousands had found pastures new where food was more abundant. To be sure there were some scattered flocks left along the bay shore where the tules grew high and rank, the seeds from which furnish excellent nutritious pickings for the fast diminishing flocks. The spoonbill was to us then the joke of the duck family and they had become so poor from lack of proper nourishment that it became a waste of ammunition and almost a crime to shoot them. The fast flying little green-winged teal stuck to these marshes nobly and was really the last of the web-toots to abandon us altogether. Countless thousands were still here long after the other species had bid us farewell.

One day I received an order for two dozen teal to be delivered two days afterward to a gentleman who was temporarily staying at the old Hotel. There was no hesitancy on my part in accepting the order and agreeing to fill it, for full well I knew the birds could be secured with little trouble. The only qualifications he had attached to the order was that the birds should be fat and in good condition. One dollar and fifty cents per dozen was the price agreed upon. I smile now as these lines are written, to think of the price I received for those same little birds. Today I could not agree to fill an order for teal as the little green-winged is now a stranger to us, although a few may be found along the bay shore on the Alameda county side. Six dollars per dozen is what they are worth today, a price which can readily be obtained if the game warden is conspicuous by his absence.

The next morning I hopped into the little scull boat about ten o'clock intending to hunt that afternoon, stay at one of the cabins down near the old Chinese shrimp house that night and finish my shoot on the flood tide the next morning. Smith's creek, its tributaries and Corkscrew slough were fine feeding and loafing grounds for the smallest species of the wild duck family, especially on a rising tide, so I decided to hunt the north marsh. Passing through the old Charlie Piken cut-off, now a thing of the past, filled in and enclosed by the levee of the Tacoma Mill Company, I stopped in the cut-off to Finger's Landing to re-grass my boat. Here suitable weeds for that purpose grew in abundance and in the course of a couple of hours my work was finished and I felt proud of the fact that the keenest eyed birds of the marshland could not distinguish the little scull boat from a section of the banks of the creek. Along towards two o'clock I turned up into the brickyard about struck a small bunch, sculled them easily and killed five. I had not seen many birds up to this time, but over in old Corkscrew the chatter of the females and the sharp chirp of the male green-wings could be distinctly heard and the two dozen I knew would be easily acquired. The tide was now strong on the ebb, with the mud banks on each side of the creek fast appearing and glistening in the warm afternoon sun. As I turned in at the mouth and headed eastward teal could be seen on both sides of the creek some banded up asleep while others were lazily feeding along the banks putting the finishing touches on their mid-day meal. Not a shot could be heard throughout the marsh and I realized that I was about to attend a veritable picnic. At the big mud flat in Cork the water was too shallow to permit of close sculling, but over on the east bank a bunch of about a dozen had huddled up together so close to each other that they gave the appearance of trying to keep one another warm. It was an easy scull and I was soon within thirty yards. Nine toppled over as I pressed the left hand trigger, but the smoke from the black powder obscured the few remaining as they jumped and flew away to safety. It was not my intention to fire any more shots than I could help, as the echo from the shots reverberates through the creeks on a falling tide and I knew it would disturb the hundreds of birds ahead of me. It is essential in wild duck shooting to use your head as well as your other faculties, if you wish to succeed, so I rested on my oar and drifted along for fifteen minutes in order to give the birds up the creek a chance to quiet down.

Corkscrew creek, with its snake-like meanderings made it an ideal slough to scull for the startled birds simply flew down around the next bend and were soon banded up on the mud again. As I rounded the next turn, keeping close to the bold bank side of the creek I almost bumped into half a dozen fast asleep. Four more fell as I let go one barrel and hundreds jumped from the banks and flew down the long straight reach ahead of me.

It was too easy. The little foragers had filled themselves up with the seeds in the crinkly grass at high water and now they simply did not seem to care to get out of my way. Visions of another big shot as before me, possibly another eighteen, so I ran the bow into the edge of the mud and waited fully twenty minutes before starting on. When I picked up the scull oar again the falling tide was carrying me along quite rapidly.

Way down on the far turn a large flock had banded and they lay in a chance for a big shot. Nothing along the mud for fifty yards, but teal had been seen and the thought struck me that the other ducks were taking a holiday. If they were it suited me as my order called for teal.

Adjusting my pillow and head rest, I took every precaution to approach that flock. In sculling the bold bank side of a creek great care must be taken on a falling tide not to run on to one of the many hard chunks of mud which are continually breaking off from the bank, sliding down and lying just beneath the surface of the water. To run upon one when near a sleeping flock means the loss of a shot most every time. The sun was getting pretty well down in the westward, just that time of day when the birds are easily sculled. Carefully I worked along and as I approached nearer it became evident that there was at least one hundred green-wings in the bunch. Fifty yards lay between me and the nearest bird. Not a head was raised; not a feather moved. Five and then ten yards nearer, when all at once I could feel the keel sliding along over a chunk of mud. Would she stick flew to my mind. My headway slackened and finally stopped altogether. She had stuck with the nearest birds about 25 yards off. There was but one thing to do and that was to shoot. I knew my gun well and as I sent two ounces of No. 7 shot into that flock, I knew something would be doing. When the smoke cleared I had thirteen down, but about half of them were crippled which had to be shot over, but I secured them all. Had I not stuck on that chunk of mud I would have broken my record of eighteen.

The sun was almost down to the top of the mountain when I started again, so I sculled rapidly. At every turn teal were found and I continued to pick up three and four at a shot until daylight began to fade and just as darkness settled down, drew up at the cabin where I was to spend the night. Just fifty of the little green-winged birds were my reward for that short afternoon's work. I fully realize that it will be difficult for the duck hunting boys of today to understand such a shoot, when a teal duck in the marshes here now is looked upon as a curiosity, but I have a living witness to prove the result of that hunt in the person of Ben Chew, son of Mrs. A. A. Trinis, whom all the old timers will remember. Ben is now living at Alviso. That evening as I was preparing to cook supper I heard a noise out at the plank wharf and upon opening the door found a more than welcome visitor in the person of Ben, who had rowed out to spend the night with me and hunt the next day.

I had filled my order for the little green wings twice over, with comparative ease and in a brief space of time, but the years that have passed have made wondrous changes, and it is with feelings of sincere regret that neither you nor I will ever, on those marshes, duplicate that hunt of years ago.

Your Friends and Neighbors developed this wealth of Power

THE ENGINEERS of this Company, supported by the combined activities of over 8,000 employees, many of whom are your friends and neighbors, are responsible for the wealth of power now available in "Superior" California.

In no place in the world are there better electrical engineers than in this state. And in no part of the state are there engineers of greater ability more loyally supported than those connected with the Pacific Gas and Electric Company.

These flesh-and-blood people, who share the same human thoughts and aspirations with you, have surveyed rights of way in the heat and cold, have hewed roads through the wildest regions, have tunneled through earth and rock, have literally fought their way through thousands of hardships in order that more than enough power could be procured.

Today the P G and E's 32 power plants are equipped to generate 591,421 horsepower—much more than required to satisfy present demands.

When the entire Pit River project is completed in conformity with engineering plans, 475,871 additional horsepower will be ready to drive the wheels of industry, pump water on the lands, lighten the labor of housewives and make life more comfortable for all.

Thanks to the enterprise of such people, California has more and cheaper hydro-electric power than any other state. Our immediate need is to develop ways to USE more power.

The Public's Right

An Announcement

The Central Pacific Railway lines are to be separated from the stock ownership and operating control of the Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky, in accordance with the mandate of the United States Supreme Court of May 29, 1922. The Court's decision now goes to the United States District Court of Utah, where the details of the separation of the two properties will be formulated.

The Court's decision means the beginning of an era of active railway competition in California. This, in turn, means the opening of a period of intensive development, of growth in population and production, never before known in this State.

The Union Pacific has consistently stated that its primary interest is an independent Central Pacific for its connection at Ogden, free and untrammelled, so that it can co-operate with the Union Pacific in providing a high grade of transportation service and in aiding the development of this territory. Such co-operation will insure a transcontinental route eastward through Ogden which will provide active competition with all other transcontinental routes.

The Union Pacific henceforth purposes to develop its legitimate interests in California. It confidently relies upon the justness and fair-mindedness of the citizens of this State. It asks for nothing more.

In the view of those sincerely interested in the upbuilding of California the Supreme Court's decision is a great public victory. Transportation facilities will be increased. There can be no deterioration of those facilities. The Supreme Court has safeguarded the public interest by providing that THERE WILL BE NO DISRUPTION OF EXISTING TRAFFIC ROUTES AND SERVICE.

The basis for rates into and out of California will remain unchanged. On business between the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific in California, the one-line basis for computing rates should be continued. The Union Pacific, if it should come into control of the Central Pacific, commits itself in advance to this policy.

There will be no non-essential duplication of facilities. But there will be legitimate and timely expansion of facilities to meet the ever-increasing public demand.
